

Winter Light

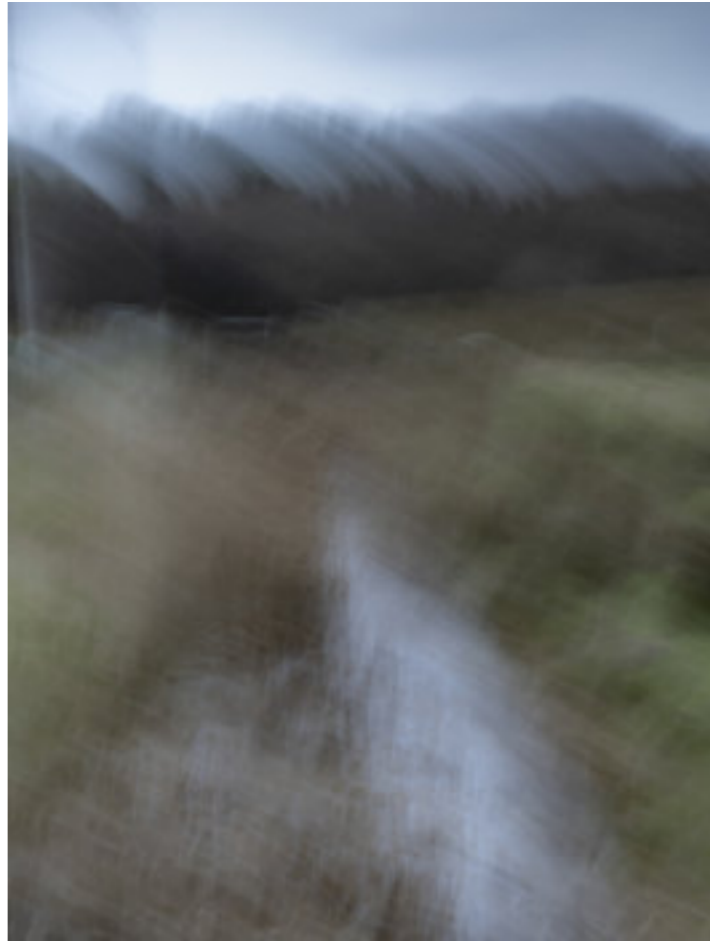

The dark months, winter seas and stormy skies

An absence of tourists, hotels closed down for the winter and people quietly getting on with their lives, going to school or work. The storms batter the buildings and the trees, whipping up the sea – the best place to watch the constantly changing light is from inside.

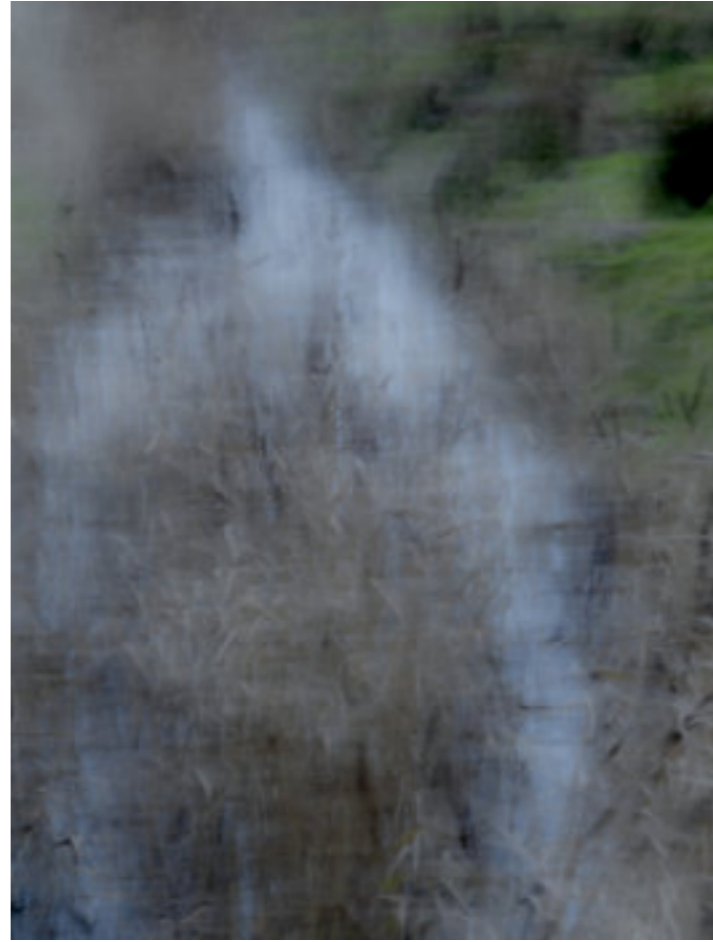

And the days draw round just as the seasons do. The light fades from the middle of the afternoon reversing it's direction, leaking the warm glow from inside into the darkness.
